Dalex's latest stars the oddest hero of the year: a gorilla with a tiger's stripes and, ahem, a rocket-powered bottom. His babies are starving in a nest at the foot of a tree, and the canopy is full of macaws. Swing from vine to vine, grab parrots as you whizz past (three at a time, tops), then drop down and pop them in the nest. Fuel comes from chillies on the bushes, and every boost leaves a little cloud and a noise the photographers on the jungle floor can hear. Press S and you go invisible for a while. Twelve levels over three zones bring sleepy crocs, wide-awake crocs and camera drones, with a happy ending if you see it through.

▲ Our hero grins from the title page. Wouldn't you, with a bottom like that?

GAZ PICKERING

"Swinging is the thing here, and it's brill. Hold O or P to build up a big arc, hit SPACE and he sails onto the next vine along, the way you're swinging. The keys answer the instant you touch them. Boosting up with Q to snatch a fleeing macaw never gets old. Gripes? Grab the golden ghost pepper and the scenery lurches along in bigger jumps for a few seconds, and on a joystick the fire button only lets go, so you still reach for W and S to dash or vanish. Even so, it's just one more go every time."

MANDY ROWE

"What I like is the fairness. The crocs in the first two levels are harmless and the game tells you so, the awake ones give you a good long warning before they lunge, and standing on the bank is safe. Get caught and you drop your parrots, not your fuel. Lose all three lives and the level starts again with the score you began it on. The jungle wraps round, too, so there's never a dead end. Twelve levels, an unseen bonus and up to three stars a level give it plenty of legs. Get it."

CLIVE BURRAGE

"Bright, cheerful jungle, a lovely title page and a soppy ending. But the old colour clash bites hard. By the chilli bushes his legs turn red and green, over the waterfall he goes half white, and at a tree top his chest breaks up into red squares. Climb past a trunk and it swells into a fat red block beside him, and the red chilli bushes change colour in their shading as the screen scrolls. The status panel blinks off for an instant as each level card clears. On the 128 there's a title tune, an in-game ditty and jingles for the cards. And four minutes to load. Hmm."

THE LOWDOWN

CONTROL KEYS	O/P left and right, SPACE let go, A drop, Q boost up, W dash, S vanish, H pause, M music
JOYSTICK	Kempston or Sinclair (fire only lets go)
USE OF COLOUR	Bright and bold, but it clashes round the hero
GRAPHICS	Cheery, chunky jungle and a grinning hero
SOUND	128K title tune, in-game ditty and jingles for the cards
SKILL LEVELS	Pick your starting zone, one to three
SCREENS	Twelve wrap-round jungle levels in three zones
GENERAL RATING	Swinging fun, a touch messy on colour

VERDICT

A swinging good time, even if the colours go bananas now and then.
